JOURNALISM AND MASS COMMUNICATION

Communication For Development

The metonymic adage “The pen is mightier than the sword” perfectly encapsulates the power of information, journalism and communication. With information being the new currency, journalism and communication professionals wield enormous power to advance progressive change in their communities and countries.

From news-gathering to news making, to ethical investigative journalism and effective communication, the program takes students on an exploratory journey of storytelling, emotive journalism and strategic communication that inspires positive thinking and action.

Journalism and Mass Communication at ACity

Our Bachelor of Arts in Journalism and Mass Communication is designed for students to engage with theory and contemporary practice, providing the necessary skills for employability within a start-up, a communications department, a media house and wherever journalistic practice is integral to an organization and society. This course is structured to offer students good career prospects in journalism with a clear focus on developing employability across the media sector, recognizing the level of fragmentation of this landscape, in both domestic and international contexts.
